About Us

Nunyara is an RACGP-accredited health service committed to providing culturally appropriate care, health promotion, and education for the Aboriginal community. We're more than just a health service; we're a community, and we're seeking someone who is motivated and shares our passion for making a positive impact.

About the Role

As our Aboriginal Health Practitioner, you will deliver a range of clinical, preventative, rehabilitative, and health promotion services under the general direction of senior staff within the Aboriginal Community Controlled Health Service.

What You'll Do:

- Assist in the provision of comprehensive primary health care and education of clients, in conjunction with other members of the health care team
- Assist with the provision of standard medical treatments in accordance with established medical protocols
- Collect and record data from clients which will assist in the diagnosis and management of common medical problems and medical emergencies
- In line with policies and programs established by the health team, participate in educating and informing the community about preventative health measures
- Undertake orientation and training programs as available
- Assess acutely ill patients and direct promptly to appropriate care

What We're Looking For: A dedicated and culturally competent Aboriginal Health Practitioner who can deliver holistic, person-centred care across clinical, preventative, rehabilitative, and health promotion areas. You will have the ability to work collaboratively within a multidisciplinary team, communicate effectively with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities, and demonstrate a strong understanding of culturally safe practice within an Aboriginal Community Controlled Health Service.
